

I work for an independent television production company called Spun Gold. We are producing a new history documentary series for Channel 4.

One of the areas we're going to be looking at is the increase in anti-German sentiments that started spreading around the UK during WWI, and the various riots which consequently broke out.

My reason for contacting you, the Anglo-German Family History Society, is because I'm still researching information for our series, and am particularly interested in the following:

1. Whether any of your members are the descendants of any of the individuals/families who were targeted and consequently affected by anti-German behaviour during WWI. I'd be interested to know whether anyone has any stories of what happened at the time, and also whether they have any archive/documents/images relating to this.
2. We are also particularly interested in some of the reports of German bakeries being targeted in the East End of London, which resulted in a bread shortage in the area - if there's anyone who might know more about this, I'd be very interested to know.

I'd be really grateful to hear from anyone who might have relevant stories/information relating to the above. My details are:
